“ I first met Barry and Norma when I was transferred to the Turner Valley RCMP detachment in 2003 and I quickly learned what marvellous people they were. When they would come into work to do their guarding I revelled in their wonderful stories and there was not a person in town they did not know. We had many late night laughfests and they looked after and cared about the RCMP Members whom they worked with AND the prisoners whom they guarded.

In later years,they assisted the International Police Association when they played Mr and Mrs. Santa at the Christine Meikle school for the mentally handicapped in Calgary. Barry commented to me that all of the volunteer Santa work he and Norma did was important but they took special satisfaction in the annual party at that school where the children, who were so very mentally challenged, would smile and hug them when Barry presented them with their Christmas gift.

When the troubles of Police work seemed to overwhelm us, as they often did, Barry and Norma always had a sympathetic ear. They did not rush to judgement or have quick answers. They did what nobody seems to do in this digital age. They listened to us. Barry's years in the Airforce allowed him to understand the complexities of public service. Barry and Norma (it is so difficult to mention one name without mentioning the other) were dedicated employees of the RCMP for thirty years and were there promptly to work whether we called them at three in the afternoon or three in the morning.

When I mentioned to them that one of our sons was interested in star gazing and telescopes, they gave him a telescope that was at their home.

I remember their cat Nutmeg who was the worlds fattest cat and not very friendly either. Barry somehow got the cat to lose weight. Knowing how stubborn cats are, I am not sure how he did that.

Barry loved his family, his children and his grandchildren. Today, the world is a sadder place and when I first heard of Barry's passing I too was sad. But then I smiled when I thought of the wonderful life he lived and the beautiful legacy he and Norma have left for their children and grandchildren. May they both go with God.
